In the one mile race open to Colorado Springs wheelmen there will be over twenty-five entries, and in the other entries many Denver men will participate. New York, June 14.—Money on call has [illegible], ranging from [illegible]; last loan at [illegible] and closing offered at [illegible] per cent.

The stock market was quiet again today and irregular in its course. Considering the adverse influences operating against the list, the undertone of speculation was conspicuously firm, and numerous instances prices closed higher than on yesterday.

Chicago, June 14.—The body of Herman Schaffner, the missing Chicago banker, was found this afternoon in Lake Michigan near the Marine Hospital. Papers in the pocketbook confirmed the identity of the corpse. Schaffner was the largest private dealer in commercial paper in the West, and his recent mysterious disappearance followed by the suspension of his bank and rumors of suicide, caused a decided sensation.

IT IS A SUCCESS.

The Committee will Meet Today to Send a Colorado Agent to the Fair.

The meeting of the [illegible] of the Boards of Trade of the State appointed to secure a further representation of this State at the World's Fair, by means of an agent [illegible] in this city today. Hon. H. H. Eddy said yesterday that there was no doubt that the plan would be a success, and that the committee would decide at today's meeting to go ahead. The money from this city is in the hands of the treasurer. Denver's Chamber of Commerce has pledged itself to raise the $1,500 asked for from that city, and money from Pueblo is [illegible]. Mr. Buckman, the secretary of our Chamber of Commerce takes a pardonable pride in the fact that Colorado Springs was the first city to get its subscription into the hands of the treasurer of the committee. It is understood that at today's meeting Captain De Coursey will be appointed State Agent, and that he will start at once for Chicago.

BACK FROM THE ASSEMBLY.

Col. De La Vergne Says it Was Hard Work Sitting on Briggs.

Col. George De La Vergne has returned from Washington, where he has been in attendance upon the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church as a Commissioner from this Presbytery. In the organization of the Assembly, he was honored with a [illegible] on Bills and Overtures. He attended every session of the Committee and of the Assembly [illegible] The vote on the Briggs case, he says, although [illegible] Professor [illegible] fairly show the unanimity of the Assembly, since many of those who were opposed to Dr. Briggs's views voted [illegible] to the Synod before coming to the Assembly.

Government Silver Purchases.

Washington, June 14.—Only one offer of silver was accepted by the Treasury department today. This was [illegible] ounces, and the amount purchased was 130,000 ounces at [illegible]. The purchases thus far this month amount to 2,[illegible] ounces.

[illegible] saloons worth $75,000 and some books. The display was opened but a few days ago and today's fire it is thought, has ruined two of the big pictures. It is impossible to estimate the damage, as the paintings will have to dry to show the extent to which they were harmed. The French tarpaulins over the display on the main floor under the French display saved the damage which would have been quite serious. H. Dow, the guard, was badly burned about the neck and was taken to the hospital.

A Fireman Killed.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., June 14.—Particulars have been received here of the partial wrecking of the limited train, No. [illegible] on the Chicago [illegible] at 4 o'clock this morning, at Belle Plain, forty miles west of Cedar Rapids. The train, which was running at a speed of fifty miles an hour, being behind time, and in a deep cut, dashed into a flat car that had been uncoupled from a switch engine about two miles up the track, and was going down grade at the rate of twenty miles an hour when the collision came.

The passenger engine was demolished and overturned. William Jenkins, the fireman, was instantly killed. His body was taken out of the wreck badly mangled. Engineer Thomas Keefe was severely scalded but it is thought he will recover. The baggage car was completely demolished and the chair car [illegible]

A peculiar feature of the accident is that none of the passengers were killed or fatally injured. [illegible]

International Typographical Convention.

Chicago, June 14.—The convention of the International Typographical Union by an overwhelming vote sat down today on innovations proposed by Delegate Tallhofer of Grand Forks, S. D. [illegible] The convention after a somewhat bitter [illegible] representation [illegible] agitation of a loan system for the relief of travelers was also voted down. The question [illegible] not less than $5 per month was referred to [illegible] taken regarding the question of paying death benefits.

THE COWBOY RACE AGAIN.

The action of the agents of the Humane Society who went to Chadron to prevent the start is very peculiar. Instead of preventing the race, they are now promoting and actively assisting it. It looks as if the sporting blood in them had been so stirred up by the preparations at Chadron as to overcome their sober judgment.

Undoubtedly, if the race really had to be run, it is better that it should be run under the supervision of men who can judge whether it is injuring the horses; but the race did not have to be run; the agents of the Humane Society could have stopped it if they had persisted, [illegible] upon themselves a great and unnecessary responsibility when they gave it their countenance and active support.

MR. POINDEXTER DUNN'S REMARKS.

Mr. Poindexter Dunn has stirred up New Yorkers very much by a remark he made the other day upon hearing of the collapse of the old theater in Washington. "Too bad," he said, "I should not have cared if it had been the pensioners instead of those poor clerks." It may be necessary to explain that Mr. Poindexter Dunn is a person from Arkansas who was on the wrong side in the late war, and who is now acting as one of a so-called committee of investigation which is trying to find, in the testimony of discharged employees, some excuse for turning Republicans out of the New York Custom House and putting Democrats in their places.

Having made this remark in the presence of several witnesses who have sworn to it, Mr. Poindexter Dunn now denies it. This sort of thing may be popular in Arkansas, but it doesn't take well in the northern States.

OLD GLORY'S BIRTHDAY.

The American flag, the Stars and Stripes, attained its 116th birthday yesterday. On the 14th of June, 1777, the Congress passed an act adopting it as the national emblem. There were thirteen stars then in the field of blue, and thirteen stripes. When Vermont and Kentucky were admitted on May 1, 1795, two stars were added to the Union, and two stripes were added to the thirteen. Still another star and stripe were added on the admission of Indiana in 1806, and it was not until April 13, 1818, that the present fashion of keeping the stripes unchanged, while adding a star for every new State admitted was adopted.

The Stars and Stripes was first used as a national emblem by John Paul Jones, who ran it to the masthead of the Ranger when he started from Portsmouth on his memorable cruise in British waters. It was first used on land in the disastrous campaign which ended in the capture of Philadelphia by Lord Howe.

A national flag is an arbitrary thing, designed and made to order; but after it has been used for many years, after men have fought under its folds and seen it waving both in the smoke of battle and over peaceful homes, a sentiment attaches to it which is one of the deepest and strongest in human nature. It typifies love of country, one of the highest and holiest sentiments of the heart, and that [illegible] the whole nation was electrified when General Dix sent that memorable dispatch [illegible] before the war began: "If any man attempts to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot." The sentiment that honors and loves the national emblem is one of the safeguards of the Republic. "Long may it wave o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

It has been evident for some time that Mr. Gladstone has not been using all the parliamentary force at his disposal, but has adopted the policy of allowing his opponents to wear themselves out by their exertions. Evidences not lacking that this policy has been rewarded with some success, but however that may be, it appears that Mr. Gladstone has at last resolved to put on a little more pressure, and the result is apparent in the passage of the important third clause of the bill and the throwing out without ceremony of a number of filibustering amendments.

If Colorado College did not get first prize at the Interstate Oratorical Contest at Columbus, a son of Colorado did, and we can all be proud of his success. The prize winner, Mr. Addison A. Hopkins, is a son of Dr. T. M. Hopkins of Denver. He entered from Lake Forest College, Illinois, and won the Illinois contest before going to Columbus.

The Aspen Leader drops into prophecy in its last issue, and announces definitely: "On the 16th day of November next Congress will pass a free coinage bill." Put this down in your memorandum book and refer to it on the date named. This is one of the biggest cases of [illegible] if it comes true.

To-day occurs the election of the new Reichstag in Germany, and no less than fourteen parties are [illegible]. Even after the election is over, it will be hard for anybody to [illegible] new national legislature stands.

The fall of the old Ford theater in Washington, followed by the collapse of a wall yesterday at Pittsburg, should lead to a general examination—by building inspectors everywhere.

To-day is German day at the World's Fair, and also the Kaiser's birthday. Whether it will be a happy day for him [illegible] the election.

Good Words for Colorado College.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

At the laying of the corner stone of the Coburn library, we were informed by President Slocum, that reserved seats for the commencement exercises of Colorado College which were to take place in the opera house the second day following, could be secured by application at a down town store. I thought this a wise and considerate arrangement, as the crush at this crowning event of the college year had always been, in my experience, very unpleasant, [illegible] admission was regulated by ticket. I therefore took the first opportunity to make [illegible] of my seats. What was my amazement then, upon entering the house a few minutes late, and with the warning of the doorkeeper ringing in my ears, that it was doubtful if I could get my seats, to find the auditorium not more than half filled, probably less. And this in Colorado Springs, which loves to talk [illegible] of afternoon teas, of its learning, culture, patronage of [illegible] good and great, its socially elevated and [illegible] there, the place, in short, we like to call the "Seat of learning of the West." If we are worthy this name, the college is the rock on which we must plant our standard, the center about which the clan must gather, and for whose support we must rally. This institution has done a noble work the past year, it has done all, nay more, than its capacity permitted. The various exercises of this finishing week have shown an unusual degree of excellence in every department. All praise to those who have labored so conscientiously and untiringly to bring about this result. But are the residents of this city really in touch with this movement for higher learning going on in their midst? If so, why do they not encourage the faculty and students with the endorsement given by their presence at their public exercises? Yesterday morning [illegible] young men, one of them a representative of a foreign nation, with well-written and well-delivered orations, made their valedictory bow to the shades and halls of their alma mater [illegible] world into which they were about to step. Did it encourage these young men's hearts, or strengthen their ambition to address and gaze upon those empty benches? Where were the literati, of whom our city boasts such an unusual number? To be sure a little group of enthusiastic, public-spirited, high-minded men were gathered about the faculty and trustees upon the stage, and a few were scattered here and there in the [illegible]. Is this what the college has a right to expect? Was it a compliment to it, or to the distinguished orator from Denver, whose beautiful, scholarly address graced and dignified the proceedings—that so many who ought to have been there were conspicuous by their absence? At Harvard College all the tickets to the commencement exercises in Sanders theater are equitably divided amongst the Senior class, and they in turn bestow them as rare privileges upon their relatives and friends. Great is the planning and intriguing in the social world to become possessed of these coveted bits of pasteboard which money will not buy. There it is both a literary and a fashionable event. As at the Queen's [illegible] it carries distinction with it, and on the other hand, those who are not fortunate enough to se[illegible] feel that their social claims has been damned in some degree. Why should it not be so here? Why should not the same emulation greet the students with a sea of faces and ringing rounds of applause? The College also should be a popular institution because it is a paying institution; it is in reality one of the most important factors and component parts of the business life of the community. It spends, I don't know how many thousands of dollars here annually of itself and through its students, and will continue to spend more and more as its strength increases. The man is out of date and prejudiced indeed, who will let the old cry of "Town and Gown" come between him and the College. It is to the moral and financial interest of every man, woman and child in this city that this institution should be a success, that its attendance should grow, its material wealth increase [illegible], as it bids fair to be, the great University of the West. The past year has been notable for the educational work done and the large increase to its funds for general and special purposes. May the good work go on, and if we cannot support it with our money let us at least endorse it with our presence and influence at every opportunity. Yours truly,

E. F. WELLES.

History of the Russian Treaty.

It is a fact which the Democratic critics of this treaty studiously and dishonorably conceal, that in its first form, as sent to the Senate by President Cleveland and Secretary Bayard, these thoroughly American safeguards were omitted. The Republican Senate of 1886 refused to ratify the treaty in a [illegible] for political refugees, and sent it back to Secretary Bayard for modification. No further progress was made with the negotiations at that time, and it was under the masterly conduct of our diplomatic affairs by President Harrison and Secretary Blaine that the treaty was finally put into a form satisfactory to the Republican Senate. Moreover, the treaty was then made to include, not in its own terms, but by tacit implication, an understanding that Russia would lend the United States its countenance, and if need be, its active aid, in maintaining [illegible] Monroe Doctrine [illegible] aggression upon this continent. It is this which gives to a treaty, which is eminently just and reciprocal, exact in terms and jealously guarded, the character of an achievement in diplomacy which may become of as vital importance in our future history as the action of Russia has twice been in our past—once when Catharine, by joining the League of Neutrals, forced George [illegible] to recognize the independence of the American colonies; and again when Alexander the Liberator, the professed father of the present Czar, by placing his warships in the harbors of New York and San Francisco at the disposal of President Lincoln, prevented the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by Great Britain and France.—New York Press.

The Treatment of Ores Carrying Fine Gold.

The treatment of ores containing gold in a state of minute division is a question that has attracted the attention of millions [illegible]. In Australia and New Zealand this is a question constantly present, and one which has not yet been solved, although [illegible] and millions have been worked at it.

[illegible] chlorination process [illegible] Whether 50 or 80 per cent [illegible] would depend on the grade of the ore, but the [illegible] points and reduction in cost of working [illegible] made with this process will soon bring [illegible] low grade ores [illegible]. The cyanide process may, as it is now being in certain cases, prove successful on ores whose composition does not [illegible].

This subject is an important one, and judging from the interest expressed in the [illegible] a successful process for treating ores carrying fine gold will have little difficulty in reaping an adequate reward.—Engineering and Mining Journal.

NATHAN HALE.

The Brave Captain Who Regretted That He Had but One Life to Give.

Although the monument to Captain Nathan Hale was long ago erected at Coventry, Conn., where he was born, it was eminently appropriate that in this city there should be another, because here was originated the enterprise upon which he entered, and here occurred the tragedy of his last hours.

General Washington was occupying the house of Robert Murray, whose farm extended from what is now Thirty-sixth street to Fortieth street. Hence the well known name of Murray Hill. The Murray mansion was situated [illegible] the Brick church stands. While occupying this house Washington determined upon discovering what were the plans and situation of the British army on Long Island.

In the regiment of American Colonel Knowlton was Nathan Hale, a young captain just of age, who had left college and the pursuits of a literary profession [illegible] in the continental army. He had recently been at the head of a little expedition on the Hudson river for embarrassing the British ships, and had shown great coolness, bravery and discretion. Colonel Knowlton selected him and sent him to Washington for instructions. There can be no question that Hale was made a spy. No such technicality existed in his case as [illegible] Sir Henry Clinton and Andre in the latter's behalf. The captain furtively crossed the sound, landing at Huntington, and thence made his way to Brooklyn and returned in a few days with the result of his observations in sketches and memoranda. He was recognized at Huntington as a strange man, who had mysteriously arrived and had as mysteriously absented himself, wherefore he was arrested and the paraphernalia of his spyship discovered. He was immediately sent to the lower part of the city, then in British possession, while Washington occupied the upper part.

The notorious "Monster Cunningham"—so denominated by many historians of that period—was then provost marshal. He placed Captain Hale under guard in the greenhouse of a Mr. Beekman, whose farm comprising Turtle bay on the East River was about where Fifty-second street and First avenue now are. Lord Howe was occupying it as his headquarters. The cruel Cunningham, without even the form of a trial, concluded to execute him the next morning [illegible].

Captain Hale wrote some family letters of farewell and asked for the loan of a Bible and the solace of a clergyman. These were insultingly refused by the provost marshal, who even tore up the letters.

The victim was then, early on the next day, carted down to the Rutgers farm and hanged after the Tyburn fashion to an apple tree that local history has shown to have been at the corner of East Broadway and Market street. When the cart—on the floor whereof he stood, a young man of even handsome, boyish appearance—was about to be drawn away to leave him suspended, Captain Nathan Hale remarked to the bystanders and grinning redcoats, "My only regret is that I have but one life to give to the service of my country." His remains rested at the foot of the fatal tree until the end of British occupation of the city permitted their honorable removal.

Historians have agreed that if he could have reached General Washington's headquarters with the intelligence he had obtained the knowledge would have saved much of after disaster to the American cause. If ever a spy was patriotic, Hale was, and Fenimore Cooper, in his novel of "The Spy," based upon the career of Harvey Birch, has drawn a vivid picture of the necessity, value and praiseworthiness of the spy in time of war.

Captain Hale was the earliest martyr of the Revolution, and his martyrdom was an appropriate incident for our metropolitan commemoration.—New York Recorder.

Augustus Ate When Hungry.

Augustus, unlike some of his successors, drank with moderation, perhaps because he was constitutionally incapable of excess. Suetonius says that he never took more than a quart—the reader will remember that the wine was well diluted with water—or if he did his stomach immediately rejected it. The wine he liked best was the Setine, grown on the heights of Sezza, and according to [illegible] Italicus fit for Bacchus himself. His favorite comestibles were brown bread, fresh cheese, and green figs, and he refreshed his palate with a juicy apple, a slice of cucumber, lettuce or [illegible] dipped in water [illegible].

Like Napoleon, he ate when he felt hungry, and did not trouble himself to wait for the regular dinner hour. For his guests he invariably chose men who had something to say and [illegible] to say it, except when he invited Tegellius, who would [illegible] and sang for hours, now in shrill [illegible], now in thundering bass. A book of the imperial dinner talk would have made excellent reading. He had a fine appreciation of a [illegible]. He had a bad habit of not appearing at dinner until it was half over and a worse one of leaving the table before it was half ended.—All the Year Round.

How Tyrrell Handles a Cobra.

By far the biggest snake in the reptile collection at the Zoo is the python in the case opposite the door. He is more than 20 feet long and is seriously thinking of growing longer still. Tyrrell picks him up unceremoniously by the neck and shoves him head first into a tank of water when he seems to need a little [illegible]. I think perhaps, after all, the most remarkable thing exhibited in the reptile house is Tyrrell. I don't think much of the Indian snake charmers now. See a cobra raise its head and flatten out its neck till it looks like a [illegible] set on end. Keep in mind that a bite means death in a few minutes. Presently you will feel yourself possessed with a certain respect for a snake charmer, who [illegible] a flute while the thing crawls about him. But Tyrrell comes along without a flute—without even a jewsharp, and carelessly grabs that cobra by the neck and strolls off with it wherever he thinks it ought to go, and you believe in the European after all.—Arthur Morrison in Strand Magazine.

Judge Harris on Tuesday heard arguments in the Cripple Creek election case and took the matter under advisement. The case is entitled John Hardwick v. J. Donahue, and plaintiff asks for a mandamus to compel a recount of the vote at the spring election. He holds that some nine or ten ballots marked with a pencil were not counted by the judges and if they had been he would have been elected a town trustee.

The Centre of Higher Chemistry, says Professor Henry E. Armstrong, is German science. The universities have cast the industries in a chemical [illegible] depend upon the chemists and have established for research some of the best equipped laboratories in the world. Germany produces about nine-tenths of the total quantity of artificial coloring matter; the leading employers of chemists being the makers of the dyes and other products of coal tar. A new laboratory for a firm of color makers at Elberfeld is a model of its kind, and employs twenty-six skilled chemists in the research department alone, and over sixty in all departments. Each research chemist is provided with an elaborately fitted-up working place, which is practically a complete laboratory of itself. Another German color factory employs even a greater number of competent chemists—not less than seventy-eight, of whom fifty-six have the degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

Extermination of Cholera.—It has been suggested that cholera may be strangled in its birthplace, effectually preventing its migrations. The disease is endemic in a low region of about 7,000 square miles at the delta of the Ganges river, in India, where it is caused by the animal and vegetable remains cast into the river. Since the interment of dead in Egypt beyond the reach of the Nile, the plague has disappeared from that country. It is believed that the natives of India would not be restrained from using the sacred Ganges as a cemetery, but that they could be compelled to cremate their dead before consigning them to the waters.

For Polar Climates.—A sulphuric acid thermometer has been patented in Germany. The mercury in the ordinary thermometer, as is well known, freezes at about 40 degrees below zero, rendering the instrument useless at low temperatures; and the alcohol thermometer is unreliable on account of the frequent evaporation of a portion of the fluid, which collects at the upper end of the tube. Sulphuric acid gives off no vapor at atmospheric temperatures, expands in the tube with perfect uniformity, and [illegible] the temperature falls to 112 degrees below zero.

A new process for making safety paper for certificates of stock, drafts, notes, etc., consists in rubbing ink over a lithographic stone until a pleasing design is produced, when this is treated and printed from in the usual way.
